5.30pm - 7.30pm Presentations and discussion

7.30pm - 8.30pm Food and drinks

People living and working in the Inner Forth and Clackmannanshire are invited to attend this free event.

Join us in Alloa for an evening of learning and discussing climate change, nature conservation and connecting people with the Inner Forth shoreline, based on recent research by the University of Edinburgh.

Why attend?

The goal of this event is to facilitate discussion on the future of the Inner Forth shoreline amongst people living and working in the area, with a focus on Clackmannanshire.

This event will also be attended by policy-makers (Scottish Natural Heritage, RSPB, and Clackmannanshire Council) to listen and learn, and they will be asked to reflect on your views at the end of the event.

How to get involved

You can find out more or register by contacting Anja via email or phone (see below for details). The venue is accessible by wheelchair. We also welcome children to attend. If you need special support to attend, we are happy to help. Please let us know beforehand if you would not like to be filmed or photographed.

Event outcomes

After the event, information notes will be published on the topics of the event. These information notes will summarise research findings, together with the main points from the discussions during this event.

We look forward to welcoming you to this evening of collective thinking on how people living and working in the Inner Forth can work together towards a socially and ecologically sustainable Inner Forth.
